

Contributor: Prijono Tjiptoherijanto

Current Function: Professor of Economics, University of Indonesia; Former CEPA's member 2006-2009

Date: 2013/03/29

Subject:

"The challenges of our globalized world are becoming more complex, especially considering the challenge of the predicted peak future human population of 9-10 billion people in 2050. Our approach to address such challenges should be universally acceptable. We therefore need to strengthen global governance to ensure it is fit for purposes, avoid overlap and the duplication of efforts. Enhanced and scaled up models of cooperation among all levels of governments, the private sector, and the civil society at global, regional, national and sub-national levels will be needed. The wealth of experience from the Millennium Development Goals should be a reference for our effort to help shape global governance and responsive partnership."